

Chipper Entertainment presents
Beat the Winter Blues with
A Night of Comedy
At the Doherty Hotel, Clare MI

Pat Godwin has blossomed into one of the most clever and prolific, comedy songwriters in the business. Pat first got national airplay with the holiday classic he crafted with his brothers James and Jack called, "Let's Put Christ Back in Christmas" from the album Reindeer Games. He's appeared on every top morning show you can think of, worked for 6 years as a part of Philadelphia's Morning Zoo, 3 years for The Bob & Tom Show, and was a frequent guest and contributor to both Howard Stern's radio and TV shows. He was featured on NBC's Last Comic Standing last year. Because he has such strong material and highly developed improvisational skills, no two shows are ever the same... not even close. And don't let that sly boyish smile fool you; it only takes about three seconds on stage to realize that Pat's comedy has an edge to it. With a mix of quirky, personal musings and off-the-cuff remarks, Godwin can segue in to any one of his songs, performed in an endless array of musical styles. He recently headlined The Irish Comedy Tour employing his vast catalog of Irish material and original drinking songs like, "Switch To Beer" and "Maybe It's Time To Go Home".

Steve Iott is a very funny man who lives in Michigan. In addition to being a professional comedian, he writes an award-winning column posted on the Internet. He also lies frequently about receiving awards for his writing. Steve is an embattled veteran comic who has seen it all, and has plenty to say about it. He does comedy without the aid of props, mirrors, or sleight-of-hand camera tricks. Known as a master of improvisation, Steve takes the audience along as he spins bizarre tales of ridiculous life experiences. No topic is safe, and no two shows are ever the same. Steve Iott has appeared on A&E, Comedy Central, and has opened shows for Steven Wright, Chicago, and Bill Maher.
